For the album Zobop Henrik has written a collection of songs that focuses on melody and groove. An urban world music that draws its inspiration from dance in different forms. Zobop brings us new meeting points: Here are influences from style icons such as Zappa and Jeff Beck, Bill Frisell and Tony Allen, but basically the music is written as folk music for electric guitar, bass, beats, drums and saxophone. "I have always loved how fiddlers play together in Swedish and Norwegian folk traditions, and I also really enjoy playing for a dancing crowd" says Henrik, "so I wanted to focus on rhythm, melody and interplay." Zobop is a meeting between those elements and improvisation – individual as well as collective. The soul of a tune, how it orchestrates the beat, the different worlds created by the melodies and interplay – this is what makes Zobop an entirely unique place to be.

The quartet was formed in the summer of 2018 after some time of experimentation with different sets and concepts.
